BALL FANS GALLERY OF NOTABLES

(Copyright 1911 by W. W. Aulick.)

HERMAN LONG

Who Restored Boston's Glory.

Once upon a time, Frank G. Steele, manager of the Boston boys, came to the open conclusion that it would be a good thing to plant a pennant in the front yard of his establishment. There hadn't been any pennants visible in those parts for many a year—not since 1883, and now it was getting to be gossip in big league circles that the Boston team had gone back. Mr. Steele took counsel with Mr. Soden, who owned the outfit, and they harnessed up a bunch of dollars to the number of $500, and sent same out to Kansas City, where the man they were after had been performing, and Kansas City delivered the goods, and that was how Herman Long got to Boston, and how Boston got to the pennant again—not once, but many times.

In every one of the championship years, Herman Long was a prop. Some justice would seem to suggest that much of the credit for the record wins belongs to the memory of Herman Long. Memory, in this instance, is unfortunately inaccurate. Herman being no longer with those who run the bases and kill the hits. While he lasted, however, there was none beside him, and when he went to Boston from the west he carried with him his wonderful gifts of fielding, of hitting, of base-running and of generalship, and thus became a permanent sensation of which the Boston team and the Boston fans were justly proud, and in whose achievements sportsmen generally was interested.

Long's figures for fielding in the five years he helped win the championship for Boston are worth a brief recalling. In the first year 1891, his percentage was 902; in 1892 'it was 888; in 1893, 886; in 1897, 908 and in 1898 he reached the 927 mark. And all this time he was hammering out and drawing a percentage for batting that was highly grateful and comforting to the rooters.

But it was in the covering of his position at short stop that Herman Long made his greatest, gained his greatest vogue. He was as active as a flea, and all over the infield and part of the outfield at once and the same time. He covered more ground than an automobile out for an endurance test, and he had a way of dragging things out of the air that would have done credit to a professional magician. He robbed more batters of hits than any man of his time, and after the other fellows had come to an appreciation of the danger of driving toward short, there was a united effort to slam to right. This, however, you can't always do; sometimes you are bound to drop the ball where you didn't intend it to fall, and our friend Herman Long never lacked for practice.

And when he once had his large Teutonic hands on the ball, the man who drove it was practically out. Herman had a marvelous faculty of speeding the sphere to the base almost before he had straightened for the throw. Try this yourself some time, and see how necessary it is to reach a perpendicular before you let go. No other fielder in memory was able to do this thing the way Herman Long did it, and for this and for other accomplishments, his name was great in the land.

But, just to the proof of the all too brief memory of the public when Long died of consumption in Denver in 1909, there wasn't a nickel in the locker, and his friends were conspicuous by not being around the once great and popular player. These circumstances so worked on the sympathies of Harry Pulliam, at that time president of the league, that he started an agitation for a home for indigent players. Before anything could come of this admirable project,

Mr. Pulliam himself had joined Herman Long.

"Why do you photographers always photograph the left side of the face by preference?"

"Because it's the best looking," was the prompt reply. "The left side of the face is always the more regular, and it always shows least the marks of time."

"But," he continued, "if you want to bring out the real character of a face, photograph the right side. There Nature sets her print. There the lines are bold and unmistakable. There every defect, no less than every excellence, is stamped deep."

"The left side, where everything is softened down, for beauty. The right side, where everything is well rubbed in, for character. Those are the portrait artist's two chief's rules."—From the Red Hen.
